

Why I Love My Library

By Veronica Lien

I love my library. When friends ask me about a good book, I ask what are you in the mood for? They usually incite on a very hilarious book, so I suggest an author or a book. Great variety of books, thoughts and feelings they bring me, and the peace and quiet. You get to fill your mind with fictional characters.

A great variety of books bring more thoughts and ideas to my head. It's like a mystery book where you unlock every door to see what's inside. I can choose a romantic book if it's Valentines Day or a good scary book for Halloween. If there are book projects and the book isn't there, I can choose another book or a sequel to that book.

Thoughts and feelings can make my day. If I'm bored to death in math or reading, I can think of my book and let my feelings fly. Sometimes I'm in a concentration camp or a plain of blue bonnets singing in the wind. If I'm feeling down, books can bring me out of this world and into another. I can feel happy, sad, sorrow, excitement, or even like crying.

The peace and quiet can allow you to go into a cloud and imagine. Usually if someone is goofing off it's hard to concentrate. If someone's talking about shoes you might not be able to listen to a book. Peace is like meditating, but instead of meditating, you are relaxing with the feel of your book.

These are reasons that I enjoy reading in my library very much. With out the variety of books, we probably wouldn't be so smart. The library is such a great place. Librarians should be paid much more. The library also has peace and quiet for studying. That is why I LOVE my library!
